AFRICA: God’s Word Reaches Remote Peoples in Their Languages
Although the Bible is not illegal or banned in some African countries, language and literacy issues nevertheless can impede the sharing of God’s word. Faith Comes By Hearing (FCBH) is responding to this challenge through tools such as its Proclaimer, a self-powered audio player with the New Testament pre-loaded on an embedded microchip. FCBH also recently completed audio translations into six African languages, including Chitonga, Chiyao, Dogon Toroso, Lukakamega, Oluluyia, and Sehwi, languages spoken by more than 7.6 million people in five countries. (Faith Comes By Hearing)

GERMANY: Feelings about Evangelism Changing
While many German Protestant clergy still have reservations about evangelism, a recent study shows that attitudes are changing in Germany. The Research Institute for Evangelism and Church Development at the University of Greifswald conducted the study on behalf of the evangelistic project ProChrist. Although many of the clergy cited spiritual care of the flock as their main concern, younger mainline theologians are becoming more open to evangelistic activity. However, German clergy felt largely helpless in spreading Christian faith. (ASSIST News)

PUBLISHER’S MEMO
Church Planting and Evangelism in the Twenty-first Century by Doug Birdsall, co-publisher of LWP. From the ministry of Jesus Christ and the early Church, it was clear that the gospel message was intended not only for the transformation of individuals, but entire communities. The interconnected relationship between evangelism and church planting continues to be the hallmark of a healthy Christian community today. Expressions of the Christian faith and how we come together in community have also become increasingly more complex and varied; however, the message and the need for the message have not changed—only how we deliver it.

THEMED ARTICLES: CHURCH PLANTING AND EVANGELISM

Evangelism and Church Planting: Implementing the Ministry Multiplication Cycle by Peter Law, president of Crossover-Australia and vice president of Crossover-USA. Christian mission has become the responsibility of the Global Church, Law writes, and within that charter we have witnessed the rapid growth of church-planting movements among unreached people groups of the world. Using the strategy Jesus employed—of moving people from outside the kingdom to becoming believers, disciples, workers, and eventually world Christians—church-planting ministries have consistently employed their own versions of what Crossover Communications International calls the Ministry Multiplication Cycle. Drawing from Jesus’ pattern of making and mentoring disciples, church-planting ministries usually follow some or all of a 4-step approach in accomplishing the assignment: evangelize unbelievers, establish new Christians through programs of discipleship, equip future church planters by training them with the necessary skills, and extend leaders cross-culturally. www.lausanneworldpulse.com/themedarticles.php/992/08-2008

Time to Shine: The Chinese Church, Church Planting, and World Missions by Peter Sung (pseudonym), who works in and around China with Chinese intellectuals and business leaders. According to some, the spread of Christianity in China over the past few decades has been called the “greatest church growth since Pentecost.” Although accurate estimates are hard to come by, there are perhaps as many as 130 million Christians today. Although Christianity has traditionally spread in the countryside of China, an increasing number of urban intellectuals are filling their ideological voids with faith in Christ. Sung shares stories of what is going on in the urban centers of China, how persecution and hardship factor into the faith, and the missional outreach that is resulting.

The Luke Partnership: A First Step in Evangelism, Church Planting, and Discipleship by Bob Creson, president/CEO of Wycliffe Bible Translators USA; Jim Green, executive director of The Jesus Film Project; and Roy Peterson, president/CEO of The Seed Company. Making God’s message clear is the aim of The Luke Partnership—a joint project of The Seed Company, The Jesus Film Project, and SIL International. The Luke Partnership has an “initial goals package” for a community, which includes: the translation of Luke’s Gospel (usually published in both print and audio form), the JESUS film (based on the Gospel of Luke), and further Old and New Testament selections. The Luke Partnership is a strategy that enables a community to attempt translation work without setting up intimidating, long-term projections for a full-scale New Testament project. The aim is to produce materials that local churches and mission agencies can use immediately. www.lausanneworldpulse.com/themedarticles.php/993/08-2008

Missional House Churches in the United States by J. D. Payne, founder of www.northamericanmissions.org. PERSPECTIVES

Mission in the Global Village by Silas A. Pinto, director of the Brazilian ministry of First Baptist Church of Orlando, Florida, USA. The high-tech, real-time communication and the global economy have brought the global village into existence. According to the United Nations, about forty million people are constantly migrating around the world. Pinto asks, “What does this mean in God’s economy? How does this shape Christian mission? What should be the face of the Church in this intercultural context?” He offers insight into: a multiethnic international Savior, a multiethnic Church, a multiethnic mission, and a multiethnic heaven.

ProChrist in Poland Sees Thousands Make First-time Commitments for Christ by Michael Klitzke, managing director of ProChrist. In eight evenings, from 6-13 April 2008, about twenty thousand of the eighty thousand visitors to ProChrist in Poland accepted the invitation to come to faith. For the first time, ProChrist was broadcast via satellite beyond Germany to 103 locations. www.lausanneworldpulse.com/perspectives.php/988/08-2008

Evangelization Efforts in Northeast Asia by Justin Long, senior editor of Momentum magazine. Northeast Asia is home to fifty-five people group clusters. Book Review: Global Pentecostalism: The New Face of Christian Social Engagement by Grant McClung, an advisor to the Missions Commission of the Pentecostal World Fellowship. In a very positive endorsement, McClung believes that Donald Miller and Ted Yamamori’s new study of global Pentecostalism captures the growing influence of transformational Pentecostalism on the international social and political scene. The idea for the authors’ research was born during their participation in a Southern World consultation when they asked one another, “Why not study growing churches in the Developing World that are involved in significant social ministry?” www.lausanneworldpulse.com/perspectives.php/984/08-2008

URBAN COMMUNITIES

Scavengers No More: Looking at Homelessness in Metro Manila by Corrie De Boer, chair of the Board of Mission Ministries Philippines. De Boer, who works in Manila, shares how her worldviews of faith and culture changed after becoming directly involved with a homeless family. She discusses the challenges of: finding a job, healing completely from past hurts, finding housing, educating the family, and discipling the family. www.lausanneworldpulse.com/urban.php/994/08-2008

RESEARCH

The Ethnicity of English Churchgoers by Peter Brierley, Senior Lausanne Associate for Church Research. Brierley takes a look at ethnic churches in the United Kingdom, concluding that one in six individuals who goes to church in England is non-white. However, not all those who attend the ethnic churches are immigrants. The initial lack of enthusiasm of white people toward blacks in their churches has largely disappeared, so that while the talk may be about ethnic churches, ethnic churches actually account for less than half of all ethnic churchgoers. Of the half million ethnic churchgoers, sixty-eight percent are located in London. www.lausanneworldpulse.com/research.php/997/08-2008
